

Lehman Receives Scroll As Humanitarian

Senator Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat-Liberal, of New York, received a scroll presented by the Metropolitan Conference of Temple Brotherhoods for his service to humanitarian causes and his achievements as an administrator and statesman. The ceremony was held at Temple Anshu-Eli, in New York.

In accepting the scroll, Senator Lehman said he believed "with all my heart that world security and a lasting peace can be achieved." To bring about peace, he said, democracy must provide greater security for all people without compromise to the rights of the individual.

"There is one major obstacle to our winning this struggle (for peace and democracy)," he said. "This obstacle is presented neither by the Communists on the left nor by the reactionaries on the right. That obstacle is in our own hearts and minds. It is fear. We must overcome our sense of personal fear which is today impeding our efforts to keep democracy a living and dynamic force here at home and throughout the world."

"Our fear takes many forms. The most prevalent is our fear and suspicion of each other. This fear leads us to question the sincerity and the morality of our fellow citizens."

"It is a good thing for men to be restrained in their judgments. But cowardice must not be confused with restraint. There is growing danger that our leaders and our neighbors will be impeded in their judgments and their actions not by the rule of wisdom, but by the fear of recrimination and reprisal by the hysterical and bigoted elements of today. Recrimination and reprisal imperils the very democracy that we are trying to save."

Honor Founder Of Art School Now 35 Years Old

Thirty-five years ago the first community art school in America was formed on the East Side of New York by a young Russian immigrant who still heads the well-known results of his project.

Abbo Ostrowsky, founder and now director of the art school in the Educational Alliance, the settlement house at 197 East Broadway, was honored at a testimonial dinner for his pioneer work in bringing creative outlets to the art-hungry and for his career as artist and humanitarian. The dinner had been arranged by the Palette Club, the student organization of the school.

The anniversary also will be the occasion for a large retrospective exhibition that will be opened to the public on April 23. It will show the work of students through the years. Among these students were Peter Blume, Isaac and Moses Sover, Philip Evergood and Chaim Gross, who now teaches at his alma mater.

The young Abbo, an art student in the Ukrainian city of Elizabethgrad, came to New York fresh from the barricades of Odessa in the Russian uprising of 1906. He continued his training at the National Academy of Design.

On leaving the Academy, he opened a studio and friends helped him to obtain commissions and to sell his paintings. By then Mr. Ostrowsky was aware of the hundreds on the East Side who hungered for expression through the arts. So he decided to teach, meanwhile continuing his painting. His teaching, Mr. Ostrowsky said, "has been for me as creative an experience as painting in the seclusion of a studio; both are forms of expression, the one intensely personal, the other intensely social."

Sees Continued Heavy Influx Into Israel

A combined sea and air operation aimed at moving 80,000 Jews out of Iraq within the next twelve months with funds provided by the United Jewish Appeal, will cost, according to Dr. George Josephthal, Director of the Absorption Department of the Jewish Agency, approximately $80,000,000. This sum is over and above the $210,000,000 required by the Agency to receive, absorb, and resettle 150,000 immigrants from other countries who are scheduled to be brought into Israel during 1950, and to provide homes and other services for these newcomers and the 85,000 presently in reception camps.

"Of the 120,000 Jews now in Iraq, we estimate that at least two-thirds want to leave," Dr. Josephthal said. "The only land route between Iraq and Israel passes through Syria and Lebanon which bar free passage of Jews. Any attempt to move the Iraqi Jews through these countries, even if permission could be obtained, might precipitate riots by fanatical anti-Zionist elements and endanger the lives of the emigrants. For this reason, we must move the Jews of Iraq either by sea from the Iraqi port of Basra to the Israeli port of Elath on the Gulf of Aqaba, at the Southern tip of the Negev—or by air. We would prefer to move them by sea, since air transport is more costly. However, we are pioneers in the movement of large masses of people by air, having just moved more than 45,000 Jews out of Yemen during the past few months."

Dr. Josephthal said that the Iraqi Government's decision to allow the Jews to leave was motivated by three factors: 1. A clandestine emigration is now in progress out of Iraq of about 2,000 monthly and the Government does not want to lose this source of revenue. 2. The Iraqi Government is anxious to clear the country of all non-Muslim elements. 3. The Iraqi Government is desirous of confiscating the bulk of the property now held by Jews, which runs into millions of dollars.

Dr. Josephthal said that once emigration starts, it will proceed at the rate of 7,000 per month, if the United Jewish Appeal provides the funds. "In addition, we must receive between 12,000 and 15,000 Jews each month from other Moslem countries and Europe." (Continued on Page Fourteen)

SMALL JEWISH GROUP OF SPAIN HOLDS TO FAITH

A recent report by Dr. Simon Federbush, member of the World Jewish Congress executive, shows that there is a functioning Jewish community in Spain which steadfastly maintains its religious traditions. In his report, Dr. Federbush announced that at the request of Jewish groups in Spain, the Congress had dispatched Torah scrolls, prayer books and other religious articles for the use of Jewish congregations in that country which had lacked such articles. The main body of Spanish Jews—some 2,000—reside in Barcelona. There is a scattering of 300 to 400 Jews in a few other cities. Of Barcelona's population, 400 are Jewish refugees supported by the JDC.

About 60 per cent of Barcelona's Jews are Sephardim, originating from Spain, North Africa, Greece, and Turkey. The other 40 per cent are Ashkenazim, stemming from Central and Eastern Europe. Aside from their liturgical differences which result in two separate religious services, the entire Jewish community is joined in a United Congregation and uses a rented hall as a synagogue.

The Women's International Zionist Organization has a very active group in Barcelona and the congregation is now organizing a Hebrew school. Senor David Romano, professor of Hebrew at the University of Barcelona, has been giving Hebrew courses in the congregation. About 150 Jews live in Madrid and they maintain a synagogue. The third Jewish community in Spain is in Valencia, and they hold Sabbath services. A few families also live in Seville, Chazar and Bilbao.

Woman Expert In Audio-Visual Aids Helps Israel

Mrs. Esther L. Berg, assistant principal at Junior High School 188, Manhattan, New York, went to Israel to organize and conduct a workshop for Israeli teachers in audio-visual aids. Widely known as a consultant on such aids, Mrs. Berg was inspired by a visit to Israel last summer to return there at her own expense to communicate what she had learned as a teacher: that audio-visual aids often improve "more learning in less time."

She helped to organize a group called the American Committee on Audio-Visual Education in Israel, of which she is chairman. Suggested by Dr. Ben Jehuda, Israeli Minister of Education and Culture, the committee, composed of specialists in the field, will evaluate films and other audio-visual aids for use in Israel. Mrs. Berg also is chairman of the audio-visual section of the Experimental Society for the Study of Education.

Dr. Moshe Avigal, supervisor of Histadrut Schools, while in America recently, asked Mrs. Berg to organize the workshop. She emphasized that Israel needs aids and materials for helping with parental education, teacher training and health. The Israeli counterpart of the American Committee on Audio-Visual Education is anxious to create, as a beginning, ten audio-visual centers, and the committee hopes to develop a basic kit composed of a film strip projector with twenty-five to fifty strips for each school. Instruction in the techniques of producing the strips is also needed.

In her workshop Mrs. Berg will be carrying on a task already begun in the U.S. A group of

Movie Head Gets Veterans' Gold Medal

A thousand veterans and guests attended a testimonial dinner given in New York at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel by the Jewish War Veterans of the United States to Louis B. Mayer, motion-picture executive. Mr. Mayer received the organization's 1950 gold medal for his contributions through movies to "world understanding of America and the American way of life." The occasion was, also, the fifty-fifth anniversary of the veterans' society.

"America must remain, at any cost, the custodian of freedom, human dignity and economic security," Mr. Mayer declared in his speech of acceptance. "The United States must be strong so that no nation may dare attack."

Jackman J. Holtz, of Boston, Mass., national commander of the Jewish War Veterans, reported that the organization had aided 110,000 veterans last year. It hoped to double that service this year, he said, adding that the $100-a-plate paid by those attending the dinner would help swell the welfare fund.

Charles H. Silver, woolen manufacturer and general chairman of the dinner committee, joined Mr. Mayer in assailing those who would "tear down the American system of democracy." Brig. Gen. Julius Klein, of Chicago, Ill., a veteran of both World Wars and former national commander of the organization, acted as toastmaster and presented the medal to Mr. Mayer.

Mission Reports Religion Opposed

Religion in Israel is opposed by powerful secularist forces that are dominant in the nation's culture and life, according to a report to the 460 members of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, presented by the organization's four-man mission to Israel which completed its studies last fall. In the present Israeli culture, the Mission reported, the forms of traditional Judaism are often retained, but only after they have been reinterpreted into humanistic terms, and the values of nationalism tend to displace those of religion.

The members of the Mission, who visited every section of Israel from Dan to Beersheba last summer and conferred with leaders of government, religion and education throughout the country, were led by Rabbi Ben Zion Bokser, leader of the Forest Hills Jewish Center, in New York. Other members were Rabbi Maxwell Farber, of Philadelphia, Penn.; Rabbi Ralph Simon, of Chicago, Ill.; and Rabbi Sanders Tofield, of Jacksonville, Florida.

The Mission's report shows that the religious spokesmen in Israel tend to seek political power as a means of bolstering religion's cause in the land. Toward this end, they formed the Religious Bloc which is represented in the nation's parliament and in the Ben-Gurion government. Through political action, they have won important concessions for religion. Civil marriage has been declared illegal; only religious marriage is recognized as valid. The state contributes one third of the budget of local religious communities. A separate religious school system exists for parents who desire that kind of education for their children. Religious units have been established in the armed forces of the country. Religious courts have sole jurisdiction to deal with matters affecting personal status, such as divorce and inheritance.

Says Yemenites Need Special Aid

Zecharia Gluska, Yemenite member of the Israeli Knesset, asserted in New York that Yemenite Jews "are not given the same consideration that Western Jewish groups are receiving." Declaring that the Yemenite Jews are living under "undesirable conditions" in various camps, Mr. Gluska announced that the drive of the American Committee for the Relief of the Yemenite Jews, for $1,000,000 would implement a ten-point program to aid the Yemenites.

Charging the Jewish Agency with placing a ban on an independent drive, Mr. Gluska said it "would like to see the Yemenites—soon to number 100,000—reduced to a community of 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.'" His program called for a sanatorium, as well as for "three free-lance societies," which "must be supported with special funds in order that they might continue to exist in the face of the large influx of new immigrants."

The Agency, the financial arm of the United Palestine Appeal, which, in turn, receives its money from the United Jewish Appeal campaign, however, emphasized that the "principle of centralizing fund-raising activities for Israel in this country has repeatedly been approved by the overwhelming majority of the Jewish communities."

In its statement, the Agency also asserted that along with the Joint Distribution Committee it has made possible "the dramatic removal of the entire Jewish community of Yemen—40,000 souls—to Israel, adding that this operation 'is one of the many which have made possible the entry into the Jewish State of more than 350,000 since its foundation.'"

The statement declared also that the "Yemenite community, traditionally one of the poorest in the world" is now receiving "larger rations and priorities in colonization and housing over other national groups entering Israel."

Meanwhile Magistrate Rottenberg, speaking before the appeal's board, said that the Appeal's agencies are faced with two major problems, "the integration into the productive economy of more than 40,000 Yemenite Jews, and the reception of some 70,000 to 100,000 Jews from Iraq who will come to Israel next year."

"Despite the considerable financial difficulties of the U. P. A. agencies," he added, "we must intensify our program to absorb the Yemenite Jews already in the country if severe economic dislocation is to be avoided; at the (Continued on Page Fourteen) completed a strip on New York that was shown at Mrs. Berg's home at 25 Central Park West.

Mrs. Berg is enthusiastic about "the wonderful cooperation and response" the committee has received from audio-visual specialists and manufacturers. Projectors, tape recorders, screens and other equipment have been contributed.

Mrs. Berg recalled that Dr. William Jensen, Superintendent of New York schools, described the committee as "Unesco in practice." At the group's first meeting he emphasized that "peace in the world can only be brought about by our relations with other countries on education matters. Among the contributions we can make to this new nation (Israel) is educational information, and audio-visual aids can be of great value in a new land."

MISSION REPORTS

The Mission's report warned, however, that dependence on political organization may have detrimental consequences for the cause of religion in Israel. "The people of Israel," the report pointed out, "are highly sensitive and intelligent, and they will not be won back to religion through state action. If they are to be reached at all it will have to be through a continued statement of the vitality of the religious idea and its significance for our time." The report saw the cause of religion strengthened as the result of the current immigration trend into Israel. Most of the many thousands of new immigrants are coming from oriental countries, and they are deeply religious people.

Special tribute was paid in the report to the Hapoel Hamizrachi, the religious labor movement, for contributing much to the reinstatement of religion in Israeli culture. This organization, with its 30,000 members and its 42 agricultural settlements, is part of the pioneering vanguard of the country and includes workers in the city and halutzim in the land.

"They (Hapoel Hamizrachi) have insisted on revitalizing the Hala-kah (Jewish law) and bringing it in consonance with the demands of life," the report said. "The example of the organization's members has impressed the country at large, and the organization is a force for traditional religion that is subtly exerting its influence, especially on neighboring non-religious settlements." The report also noted the indications of a revolt against secularism among some of the nation's younger intellectuals. The creation of the state, by fulfilling the ideal of Zionism, has left a certain void in Israeli culture which will stimulate a new concern for the more universal values of Jewish religion. In commenting on the future of Judaism in Israel, the report quotes a government clerk as follows: "The Judaism that will win the hearts of the people of Israel will be quite different from the official orthodoxy that now prevails in the land. Perhaps a bitter 'Kultur Kampf' might yet have to be waged before the new forces latent in the land are permitted to come into their own. American Jewry might help show them the way."

The report concluded with the conviction that American Jews must continue to depend on their own resources for their religious life, and cannot lean for guidance on religious institutions in Israel.

GOLDSTEIN-GREENBAUM

The marriage of Miss Faye Sarah Greenbaum, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Greenbaum, 69 Oxford Street, to Donald Samuel Goldstein, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goldstein, 198 Gladstone Avenue, took place on Sunday, March 12, at half-past five o'clock, at Beth Jacob Synagogue, with Rabbi A. Her gown was of white slipper satin, fashioned with low neckline in cape effect, with inset yoke of nylon net, long pointed sleeves, and flared skirt, padded at the hipline, and extending into a long train. Her tiara of seed pearl beads held a full-length tulle illusion veil, embroidered with Swiss lace, and she carried a bouquet of Calla lilies. Miss Toby Fromowitz was maid of honour in orchid-coloured net over taffeta, made in strapless style, having a full skirt, and matching net stole. Her headpiece was a net crown, and she carried a cascade of yellow roses. BEDS FOR BANANAS ON THE WAY TO CYPRUS

BY LAURENCE KOHLBERG, FORMERLY SECOND ENGINEER, AT THE AGE OF TWENTY, OF THE S. S. REDEMPTION,

WRITING IN THE MENORAH JOURNAL

(Concluded from Last Week)

We were lucky to be in Varna, since it was the leading resort in Bulgaria, and there were many people who could speak French, German or even English. Although they were always whispering about the secret police and the militia, all of them seemed to feel free to gripe to us about the new regime. I think that, eventually, everybody in Varna who talked to us asked if we could smuggle him out on our ship. Even the movie queen of Bulgaria, whom the boss used to take around, said she'd give up her career to work as a housemaid in the States. Odd situations used to develop when Rudy, our captain, who was an old Communist Party member, began telling these Bulgarians how wonderful their new regime was and how decadent America really was.

But after the "scandal" everybody became cautious about being seen with us.

The "scandal" occurred after we'd spent the afternoon at a roadhouse in the country. The roadhouse consisted of a barn with benches and tables, where a farmer served up his home-brew vodka. Pigs wandered between our legs and chickens flapped around; still, in spite of these distractions, we managed to keep our attention on the vodka. Later we returned to a beer-garden on the main street of the town, where everything was fairly quiet until George decided to dance the hopak on the table.

George, who was built like an ox, was normally the moral mainstay of the crew, but now he became really inspired, and there was soon a large crowd around us. Eventually he sat down, but then decided to do an encore, and when five of us tried to hold him down, he really cut loose, throwing tables and chairs in the air. Soon a bunch of Bulgarian soldiers and secret police appeared and pushed us all off to jail, until John the Shu-Shu came down and pulled us out.

There were quite a few Jews in Varna, but they didn't have much to do with us. Our passengers were going to come down from Rumania; no Bulgarian Jews were allowed to leave the country. Unlike the Jews in Rumania, these were descendants of Spanish Jews who came in during the Inquisition. There was never much antisemitism in Bulgaria; and during the war the Bulgarian Government, as an ally of Germany, was allowed control over its Jews. As a result, they escaped much more lightly than any of the other Jews within the German-dominated areas. Since most are well educated, they are useful in peasant Bulgaria.

The British had been putting pressure on the Government, through the Allied Control Commission, to make us get out. Finally we were ordered to leave Varna; so early Friday morning we left and landed again twenty miles down the coast at Burgas. The Allied Control Commission didn't meet over the weekend; the next week the Bulgarian peace treaty was signed and we were safe.

Soon we were joined by the Northland, which had finally gotten cleared in France, and we awaited the refugees together. Each day they were supposed to be on their way; but weeks passed before we received word that the freight trains loaded with people would definitely arrive that night.

The Northland was to be loaded first, as we still had to take on oil; but all of us were to go over to organize the loading, since it had to be finished before daybreak. It was D-Day for us, and we all shared the excitement of Davey, our fervently religious ex-Hebrew teacher.

Around midnight the train finally arrived and was shunted down to the dock. There were three thousand refugees, old people laden with huge packs containing all their worldly possessions, youth marching to the rhythm of militant Hebrew songs, orphan children, and at the end a woman with her child, born a few hours earlier in a box car.

Davey, who was supposed to direct the people, began embracing each one of them. Rudy, our skipper, burst into tears, even though it wasn't the Communist line. A soberer note was maintained by Charlie, our Gentile first engineer, who turned to me as the first refugee came up the gangplank, and said, "I'm not sure, but that guy looks like a Jew to me."

Soon we were all busy trying to squeeze one more mama or kid into those three-decker shelves. The people had expected to find Greek or Turkish sailors, so they were really surprised to find Jews, volunteer American Jews. John the Shu-Shu said he wished there were fifty more of us, not because we were any good as sailors but because we gave the people a lift.

It took us five hours to finish loading, and at six in the morning the Northland pulled out, with the people singing Hatikvah, the Hebrew national anthem. She dropped anchor in the harbour to wait for us to load, but the people thought it was in order not to travel on the next day, which was Yom Kippur. The Northland's deck was thronged with people rocking in prayer, casting the sins of the year into the water. When their skipper, Lewis, appeared on deck with a skull cap and a prayer shawl, rocking — although not because of religious ecstasy — they were sure their fate was in pious hands.

Meanwhile, the oil train finally arrived, and the next night we loaded our own fifteen hundred passengers and set out. The sea was calm and the people seemed happy. They got two hot meals a day as well as cigarettes and chocolate, and the ventilation wasn't too bad, even if sleeping conditions in the crowded wooden bunks were none too comfortable. Their main complaint was that they couldn't wash except with salt water.

There were plenty of doctors and nurses aboard, and we had a hospital set up. One of the boys even had his teeth drilled by a dentist who had brought along his equipment.

There were a couple of accordions, although there wasn't much room to dance, and everybody was very friendly. Soon Buckshot was in love again. But the most important social event of the cruise was a marriage, held on deck

It took a miracle to put this backyard here

This is the backyard of a young immigrant family recently brought to Israel.

Do you think the most wonderfully landscaped garden could look as beautiful to them as this little plot of rough grass—all their own—under the morning sun that shines on their own new free land of Israel?

It took a miracle to put this little backyard on this spot. A miracle wrought by brave hearts and strong hands the world around.

It took the courage and the tenacity of the young men and women of Israel who fought and died to defend their new State.

It took the self-sacrifice and devotion of all the people of Israel who have stented themselves to provide for the homeless and oppressed pouring through their gates.

It took the generous assistance of the people of Canada who rose to the demands of an historic hour.

And though a tremendous job has been done, the good fight is not yet over.

Remember as you look at these happy young parents, these appealing little Israelis with their dishpan tub, that there are families just like them—just as appealing, just as eager, just as obviously "good stuff" for the making of a great nation—waiting in tents and barracks for a home and a chance.

How can we stop before they too shall have settled in their own backyard? How can we stop before we have finished the job?

under a prayer shawl, and a reception in the galley afterward. Unfortunately, there was no stateroom for the young couple.

Most of the people were Rumanians, although many were survivors of the German camps and others had been in Russia during the war. We even had some ex-Heroes of the Red Army with boxes full of medals. Their attitudes toward the Soviet ranged from lukewarm to cold. All of them complained about anti-Semitism in Russia, particularly in the Ukraine, although some said it wasn't the Government's fault. Most seemed to take the Russian methods of government for granted; ten years of suffering had made them a little hard-boiled. They could even joke about being sent to the soap factory. We didn't have any native-born Russian Jews. Apparently, it was impossible for them to get out.

Life took on a more serious note when we got through the Dardanelles, for there was the British destroyer waiting for us, soon joined by several other destroyers and a couple of light cruisers. As we passed between the Aegean Islands with the English behind us, they flashed us a message that the course we were taking would bring us dangerously close to mine fields. It was a terrible problem to the captain: should he take their word? To us it seemed incredible that they'd try to delude us; but the captain decided to continue on the old course, and we passed through safely.

All along we had been hoping to transfer our people to the Northland about a hundred miles off the Palestine shore, so that we could go back for another load. On the sixth night we got orders to stand by to make the shift; but when the crew of the Northland tried to move their people below decks to make room for our people, they found there wasn't enough room, so we had to prepare to be boarded.

The next morning the Hebrew flag, the blue star of David, flew from our mast, which the boys greased so the British wouldn't be able to get it down. A large sign was hung over our side with our new name, the Haganah ship Gaulah ("Redemption"). The Northland also carried signs with her new name, Medinah Yehudit ("The Jewish State").

We had large stores of wooden clubs aboard and all the younger people seemed eager to fight off the boarding party, but we received a radio message from Palestine to offer no resistance. Around noon we made a broadcast to the Haganah radio station, which rebroadcast it through Palestine.

Some of the people sang Hebrew songs; Chaim, our official orator, made a speech in Hebrew; and some of us got together and wrote a speech in English. Or rather, we let Lippy, our ex-social director of the Borough Park Jewish Veterans, write a three-thousand-word speech, which we got down to the required laconic three hundred words by cutting out some of the clichés.

By then we could see the coast of Palestine in the distance, and the British marines were lining up on the landing platforms built on the destroyers. Our crew, to disguise themselves, were all busy getting ragged clothes from the refugees, adopting babies and even complete families, and went around muttering Yiddish phrases to themselves. I noticed a young rabbi, complete with a beard, black coat and hat, prayer shawl and a Bible, which he was reading to a group of children. As I approached, without changing his intention he broke into some profanity known only in Brooklyn. It was Lou the atheist, one of the boys who'd been on the Ben Hecht and been held by the British. Now I knew why he had nursed that beard all the way across.

The chief Len, the fireman, and myself were to be below when the British boarded the ship in order to put the pumps out of commission so she'd have to be towed in. Len and I were worried the British would find us below and try us as sailors with a possible four-year jail penalty. The chief said, "My only worry is Haganah will go broke"; he'd be getting paid in jail. But we were all relieved when they sent down twenty refugees to mix with us in the engine room.

About ten miles off the Palestine coast, south of Haifa, the British came alongside and told us to turn back. There was no answer to this, so they began throwing tear gas grenades and then boarded. Below, we felt a crash as the destroyer hit our sides. We sabotaged the plant, rushed up the emergency ladder and mixed with the people on deck. The British had gotten control of the wheelhouse without violence, and now they stood and looked at us, a little curious and a little worried.

John and Chaim distributed the remaining food and cigarettes to the people.

It was night by the time they towed us into Haifa harbor. Spotlights played on us as we pulled in. Lou, the "Rabbi," and myself were among the first to get off and go through the gauntlet of the search and D.D.T. job. The British were "Red Devils." First Airborne troops, mostly bored boys about my age. They directed us in English, and it was hard not to understand when a sergeant told Eli, "You look just like my stupid cousin." Another looked at Lou and asked, "What's that?" and the sergeant answered with an air of wisdom, "Oh, he's a very religious Jew." We were worried about Heavy, our three-hundred-pound mate; but we saw him climb onto the English ship with John the Shu-Shu, and we knew he was all right so far.

The boats used to take us to Cyprus were cargo ships with part of the deck caged off and a couple of large rooms with rows of benches. By some ironic twist they were called Empire Rest and Empire Comfort.

It was when we got aboard the Empire Rest that we first realized the gratitude our people felt toward us. As soon as we were past the British guards, a score of them ran around trying to make us comfortable, bringing us the crackers and tea the British gave out, making room for us to lie down on the benches, giving us their coats, and even apologizing for the shrew who sat across from us yelling at her husband and accusing him of making a scene whenever he opened his mouth to say "Yes, dear." I regretted then the harsh answers I'd given some of those people on the ship when they'd asked for favors, or when their manners weren't too good. It was nice being a hero and part of the legend of their ship, Redemption.

The British guards allowed us to go up for fifteen-minute stretches of air in the caged-off parts of the deck, women and children getting preference. As we waited at the door the English corporal said,

"Don't look at me, it's that bastard up there who won't let you out," pointing to the sergeant at the top of the stairs.

As we left the ship at Famagusta, Cyprus, all the soldiers said good-bye to each of us and patted Lou on the back and said, "Take it easy, Pop."

When we got ashore a major asked in English for four volunteers to watch the baggage. As no one came forward, he picked them out of different parts of the crowd. Purely by chance he chose Lou, Eli, myself and our Spanish steward. He asked us if any of us spoke English and we all looked blank. Then he muttered something about "these Jews only speak English when they want a cigarette." Finally our Spanish cook said, "I speak a little English." So we listened to the major's English and pretended to understand when the cook translated into Spanish.

We were loaded into trucks and taken to the other side of the island near Larnaca, where the refugee camps were. There we passed through an army and C.I.D. control which consisted of a search for arms, money which was deposited by the British, and valuables which were occasionally taken if the refugee was too frightened to complain.

As soon as Heavy entered there, a soldier said to him, "What the hell are you doing 'ere, Yank?" Heavy just looked aloof. But when he stripped and revealed the American eagles, anchors and mermaids tattooed on him from head to foot, they took him aside. All he would say was the Yiddish phrases we'd taught him, but they found a draft card he'd sewn in his pants, so he decided he might as well talk English. He was taken to the Major's office, where a girl from the camp was working. Later she told us that the Major had asked him what he was doing there. Heavy answered, "I'm going to Palestine."

"You're not Jewish, why do you want to go?"

"Everybody's going."

"Well, we'll let you go back to America if you tell us who the other crew members are."

"I'd like to be alone with you, Major"—the Major got up—"and I'd knock your block off."

They put him in the guardhouse overnight and he had another interview with the Major. The Major told him they were going to put him in the camp with the rest of the refugees to see how he'd like it for a couple of years.

Some of the other boys had close calls, for there was a Rumanian Jew in the control, a member of the British Army, who could speak all the European dialects. He seemed to have worked with the Nazis in Rumania, and the British themselves didn't have much use for him.

After the control, we were driven into the camp, issued a blanket, a plate, knife and fork, and left to our own devices. The British left the organization of the camps entirely up to the refugees themselves, with the help of the Joint Distribution Committee and the Jewish Agency. We seldom saw any British soldiers except those guarding the barbed-wire fence and driving food trucks.

The camps themselves consist of tents and Quonset huts and a few shower huts.

After a refugee had been on the island for ten months he usually acquired space in a Quonset hut and probably made himself fairly comfortable. If he was with his wife, they could cook their own food, but must eat in the mess hall and share the kitchen duties. Food consisted mainly of dehydrated potatoes and macaroni, with some meat, local vegetables, coffee and margarine. It wasn't on a starvation level, but most people's health was fairly low. Most of us got dysentery and boils during our two-month stay. The starchy diet seemed to have a peculiar effect on the women—they all become very well developed in the upper chest. In fact, there wasn't a girl on Cyprus who doesn't put Lana Turner to shame.

The boys of the crew lived together in a Quonset hut, easily distinguished by its slopy interior and the large wine barrel inside. Haganah bought us one hoghead of the local vintage each week, and the celebration we held when it arrived was our way of keeping track of time. The refugees amused themselves more constructively, played soccer, practiced Haganah commando tactics, held amateur theatricals, or danced the Palestinian folk dances around a bonfire.

We had heard the British claim there were Soviet agents among the refugees. However, up to now, the British haven't revealed how they found this out. One thing is quite certain: they have not identified any Russian agents among the immigrants on the ships captured. They haven't even bothered to look.

The British C.I.D. and army "control" of the refugees going to Cyprus and entering Palestine was so inept that the thirty-eight American crew members of the Haganah ship Redemption, including myself, passed through it without being identified. Our attempts to disguise ourselves as refugees were definitely amateur. We were spotted as Americans by the people on Cyprus before we opened our mouths.

Did anyone know of any Soviet agents? The answer was "No."

There were many people who had been in Russia; but most shared the opinions of an American Jew, an ex-Wobly who had jumped ship in Russia in the early 'thirties. Too independent-minded, he had been put away in Siberia to cool off. He's been released to work during the war, and got across to Rumania where he'd joined the illegal immigration. He was only forty, but he was completely broken in health and spirit.

The people sympathetic toward Stalinism were members of a Zionist political party called Hashomer Hatzair, who numbered perhaps fifteen per cent of the refugees. While we were on Cyprus they celebrated the anniversary of the Russian Revolution by marching around with pictures of Marx and Lenin. But most of the members I knew winked as they marched past me.

They took its politics with a grain of salt. They had joined the organization in Rumania because its members were the quickest to leave Europe. The Communists prefer to have sympathizers leave rather than those openly disaffected. And in spite of its sympathy for Stalinism, Hashomer practices real and democratic communism on collective settlements in Palestine.

Most of the pro-Russians were young boys and girls who had spent their lives in the German prison camps until they were released by the Red Army. One boy told me that, after releasing him from a camp near Prague, the Red soldiers had set him down the the moat prepared for the S. S. officers. Compared to the Nazis, they were wonderful.

In any case, even these Hashomer sympathizers were as far from being Stalinist agents as the members of Hashomer here in America. They were Jews first and Socialists second. And the largest proportion of them came from the American zone, France and Italy.

A few days after we arrived, the crew of a previous ship, the Despote, left. It was a small landing craft which had sailed from Italy flying an Egyptian flag. They had been about fifty miles

Israel Seeks U.S. Help To Buy Arms

Israel told the United States the seven-nation Arab League has thwarted the possibility of peace in the Middle East. In a forty-five minute interview with secretary of State Dean Acheson, Ambassador Eliahu Elath denounced the League for making it impossible for Israel to negotiate with individual Arab states, and for lifting the former Mufti of Jerusalem, Haj Amin el Hussein, from his recent obscurity.

The Ambassador's action followed a decision by the Arab League at Cairo ten days ago that the Arab member states would be forbidden to negotiate individual peace treaties with Israel. Peace is now maintained by armistice agreements. Diplomatic reports say that the League decision disrupted Israeli negotiations with King Abdullah of Jordan just as they were about to be concluded, and that the negotiations now have been broken off.

Ambassador Elath told Secretary Acheson, he said later, that the Arab League, in its six years of existence, has done nothing for the social and economic welfare of the Arab peoples, and constantly has torpedoed Israel's attempts to reach peace with its Arab neighbors.

"The last session of the Arab League cannot be separated from the rearmament race in the Arab countries, which is becoming an increasing threat to peace and security in the entire area," Mr. Elath told reporters. "The bellicose campaign of the Arab leaders, the aggressive tone of the deliberations of the Arab League, the significant role played by the Mufti representative in these deliberations, and the supply of arms to the Arab states by the British government—all these remain of serious concern to my government. The British, who supply arms freely to the Arabs, deny the same right to Israel, and thus encourage the Arabs in their aggressive tendencies."

Haj Amin el Hussein fell from prominence as an Arab leader in 1948, when his military forces failed against Israel. He remained active in political intrigue outside Palestine, however.

Ambassador Elath told Secretary Acheson, he said, that the Arab League demonstrated its intransigence by inviting Haj Amin's representatives to its meeting. He recalled the Mufti's previous activities against Jews, and said his new participation in the Arab League "demonstrated the League's support of the Mufti's policies, which have only one meaning—renewed war and aggression."

In a general review of the problem with Secretary Acheson, the Ambassador reaffirmed Israel's desire for peace, and expressed hope that the United States will render friendly assistance in handling Israeli requests to buy American arms, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

"We are confident that if the Arabs know that Israel is fully prepared to meet a new aggression, they will think twice before starting on a new adventure," he said.

Israel Celebrates Its Second Anniversary April 23

Israel celebrates its second anniversary this year on April 23 in accordance with the Hebrew calendar. In its first momentous year, the people of Israel won their independence.

In the second year, they shared their independence with hundreds of thousands of immigrants who came from all parts of the world to make their home in the new Jewish State. In its first year, the people of Israel had to struggle for life and security while they established the agencies of government — the parliament, army, and administrative machinery. They were compelled to fight as they built. The second year, which comes to an end on April 23, has been a year of consolidation and development.

On May 11, 1949, the new State finally was admitted as the 59th member of the United Nations. The blue and white flag of Israel was raised in the circle of banners at Flushing and at Lake Success. By the end of the year, 60 countries had recognized Israel. Among them were three Moslem states.

Beginning with a population of more than 650,000 Jews in 1948, Israel had close to 1,000,000 by April 23, 1950, in addition to about 180,000 Arabs and other non-Jews. The millionth Jew entered Israel on December 18, 1949. The new immigrants came from some forty countries. The Jewish Displaced Persons camps in Germany, Austria and Italy, where stateless and homeless Jews had been compelled to wait for several years after the war, are almost empty today. Most of their former occupants have found homes in Israel, some of them in the United States. Only a small number remain in the camps, and among these are the aged, blind, and incurable. But even these — about 4,000 of them — are now beginning the final journey to their homeland in Israel, where they will be given special care.

More than 40,000 Jews from Yemen were speeded by airplanes in the historic "Operation Magic Carpet" of the Joint Distribution Committee and the Jewish Agency. Within a few months, the remaining thousands will have been gathered up and this Jewish community will have been transplanted — completely — from the Arabian desert to Israel. The coming year may witness the emigration of large numbers of Jews from Iraq, one of the oldest oriental communities in the world, which recently sanctioned Jewish emigration.

The people of Israel have voluntarily accepted very heavy taxation and economic burdens made inevitable by the rapid increase in population, the resulting scarcities of essential supplies and inflationary pressure. As a consequence, early in its second year Israel adopted the most rigid austerity regime. There were four meatless days every week, and the meat ration for each person each week was a mere seven ounces. As Year II came to an end, Israelis allowed themselves only 2600 calories daily, less than the British food ration after World War II.

The battle against inflation was fought fiercely throughout the year. The Histadrut, Israel's Federation of Labor, accepted three substantial pay reductions. The cost of living, which had been spiralling upward since 1939, was actually reduced by nearly 20 per cent. Although the agricultural yield rose 20 per cent, Israel cannot yet produce all the food and staples needed for its population. It must import, and throughout this past year a careful balance had to be maintained between imports for food and the essentials of life and raw materials to keep Israel's industrial plant operating.

Expansion of that industrial plant is vital if Israel is to absorb its new citizens, and one of the most important legislative acts of Israel's Knesset (parliament) was the adoption of a bill to encourage capital investment. Under this law, foreign investors and local investors in new enterprises in Israel will receive substantial concessions with respect to taxes and, in the case of foreign investors, the withdrawal of profits in their own currency.

Since the State's establishment, there has been a steady growth in Israel's industrial life. Thus, in the twelve months of 1949, 250 new industrial enterprises began operating and 204 were in the process of establishment, while total investments for the year equaled $241,000,000. American capital and "know how" will aid in the erection at Haifa of the first automobile assembly and tire plants in the Near East this summer.

During this last year, Israel improved its communications, extending postal, telephone, telegraph and broadcasting links with the outer world, greatly expanding its merchant marine, restoring its railroad lines, establishing air communications with other countries, and, finally, inaugurating its own air line — El Al. Large-scale irrigation projects, particularly in the Negev (the southern desert) are being launched. Much of the country's development is being engineered with equipment purchased in the United States through the $100,000,000 Export-Import Bank Loan.

While Israel has now concluded seven trade pacts to promote its exports, the United States is far and away Israel's leading supplier. Last November the figures showed that Israel's purchases from the United States in that month exceeded those of all its Arab neighbors. The election of Israel's Knesset during Israel's first year was an unprecedented event in the Near East, for Arabs and Jews voted together, the Arabs electing their own representatives. For the first time in the history of the Near East, Arab women cast their ballots. The Knesset began to function in Israel's second year and to contribute to the cultural and economic renaissance of the Near East.

One of its major legislative measures was an act making education free and compulsory for all children between the ages of five and 13, and for juveniles between 14 and 17 who had previously been denied an elementary school education. By 1949, 110,000 children were in elementary schools, contrasted with 80,000 the previous year. About 15,000 Arab children attended schools. The dedication of the Institute of Physical Chemistry of the Weizmann Institute of Science gave Israel the best equipped research center in the Near East.

The Hebrew University, which will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary next month, has not yet returned to its home on Mount Scopus in the absence of an agreement with Jordan. In the meantime it is occupying temporary headquarters in Jerusalem.

During the year, Israel's relations with the neighboring Arab States were governed by a system of armistice agreements, but these armistice agreements have not been converted into peace treaties because the Arab League opposes a peace settlement with the new State. Israel's Knesset adopted a peace law drafting both men and women for two years of military service.

The Arab population in Israel on its second anniversary was estimated at 180,000. And one of the major problems confronting the State of Israel this last year has been the resettlement and re-employment of many of the Arabs who were displaced by their war against Israel. Israel now has 73 Arab public schools, more than 170 Arab teachers, and has started a training school for Arab teachers. Four Moslem courts are now in full operation in Arab areas and about 150 Moslem officials have been appointed by the Government to deal with Moslem affairs. About 11,000 Arabs are members of the Histadrut, Israel's Federation of Labor.

LEHMAN

The Metropolitan Conference of Temple Brotherhoods is an association of men's clubs of Reform synagogues in the metropolitan area with a total membership of 10,000. Harry M. Weinberger, president of the conference, presented the scroll, which read:

"To Herbert H. Lehman, first man of our people, Governor of our state, and Senator, you have wielded the power of high office for the betterment of mankind. Because of your striving toward the brotherhood of man, its goal approaches near to reality. You have honored and glorified the name of Israel."

The school opened in a back room of a photographer's shop on Houston Street, with two pupils, says the New York Times. The first was Willie Katz, 12 years old. The model was a peddler who received fifteen cents for three hours of posing. In a few weeks, the University Settlement House at Eldridge and Rivington Streets offered space for the infant school. Soon the classes were crowded with young and old.

In the early days pupils paid a three-cents-a-day fee to pay for materials and models. The school was in grave financial difficulties, and its head, who received no pay for the first three years, had to float several loans to keep the project alive.

One of Mr. Ostrowsky's associates recalled that one of the pupils failed to show up at class for several successive sessions, and the director learned that the student had no shoes. The shoes were provided out of Mr. Ostrowsky's purse.

Since 1915, the school has been under the wing of the Educational Alliance, established in 1899 and supported by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. A small fee is charged for tuition in three-hour sessions, four days or evenings a week. There never has been a fee for those who cannot pay.

The director finds time to do enough painting and etching so that he "doesn't feel frustrated." He is represented, for example, in the Metropolitan Museum and the Library of Congress, and has participated in a number of national and international exhibitions.

same time we must redouble our efforts to facilitate the move of Iraq Jews, since the situation of the Jewish community there has consistently deteriorated and lately has reached the point of extreme danger."

Thus, we foresee no slackening in immigration into Israel during 1950. As a result of this influx, we anticipate that the population of the immigration reception camps which presently is at 85,000, will jump to 110,000 by this summer, despite the fact that we are moving people out of the camps into settlements and towns at the rate of 10,000 each month."

The Egyptian Government, with which Iraq conferred before announcing its decision on Jewish emigration, is also permitting Jews to leave. Egyptian Jews are now coming into Israel at the rate of 2,000 each month. Other Moslem areas from which large-scale Jewish emigration is proceeding, were Tripoli, all of whose 40,000 Jews will be in Israel; and also North Africa. In addition, immigrants are coming into Israel from the countries of Eastern Europe. The total number of newcomers for whom the United Jewish Appeal must provide assistance during 1950 will exceed 800,000. Dr. Josephthal said. This includes the 85,000 in the camps, about 60,000 from Iraq (by the end of December) and 160,000 from other countries.

Under a new plan devised by the Jewish Agency, immigrant families are moved to the site of new settlements even before homes are ready for them. While they are still living in tents, they are employed at constructing their own homes and at beginning the agricultural development of the new site. The camp population is reduced, the immigrants are given employment, and the housing and settlement program is speeded. Dr. Josephthal reported that 12,000 new housing units have been constructed in Israel since the beginning of this year, and it is hoped that 25,000 will be completed by the end of 1950, if sufficient funds are received from American Jews, through the United Jewish Appeal.

BEDS FOR BANANAS ON THE WAY TO CYPRUS

away from Palestine, still suspected by the British, when the captain noticed a ship. A few hours later the Despita was boarded by the British. Then a girl, who was recognized as the one flashing the light, stepped forward and proceeded to identify the crew members. They were locked in the hold. However, in the mixup of unloading in Haifa, the crew broke out and mixed with the refugees and the British let it go at that. The girl went to England.

Her half-sister, who was in Cyprus, said the traitress's father was a British military attaché in Hungary and their mother was Jewish, but she had never suspected her sister was working with the British. Haganah was of course interested in finding her, although the red-haired young skipper of the Despita wouldn't say what would happen to her if they did.

The technique of getting us out of Cyprus was simple. The list of the seven hundred and fifty refugees who were allowed to leave each month was made up on the basis of priority of arrival. We were to assume the names of people on that list, who were therefore set back a month. The people who were supposed to leave had already waited about a year, but it was understood that the sailors should leave first.

Still there weren't enough places for all of us, so four boys volunteered to stay behind until the next quota. Lohal, the Greenwich Village writer, was the first to volunteer. He was getting three square meals a day without working and was a hero to boot.

One of our Gentile volunteers, Dave Blakr, also was for staying behind. Dave was a graduate chemist who wanted to live as a farm worker in a communal settlement in Palestine, where he felt life would be more natural and just than in America. He was always a little distant from the rest of us.

We couldn't understand a man who studied Hebrew when he could go ashore in France and chase women. Nor could we understand it after we reached Palestine when Dave took the $100 Haganah gave each of us and went straight to a settlement and gave the money to the communal treasury. When we visited him there he was working hard in the fields and speaking a beautiful Hebrew. He seemed much happier than he'd ever been with us.

It was seven weeks after our arrival in Cyprus when we again went through the British control and boarded the ship chartered by the Jewish Agency to take us to Palestine. The other people were elated, but we were downcast at the thought of still another month in the British quarantine camp at Athlit, near Haifa. Of course, we could take heroic measures like John, our commander, who'd gone the month before. He had slipped over the side of the ship outside Haifa harbor, and stayed in the water nine hours before he found a place where he could land unobserved by Arabs or Englishmen.

Otherwise, it looked as if we'd be stuck, so I stuffed myself on the ship's biscuits, not knowing when I'd get my next meal.

As the ship pulled into the dock, we began looking around for methods of escape; but we all found ourselves on the buses going to Athlit. British tanks and motorcyclists were guarding us. There were no guards on the buses, and the drivers were Jewish.

We told the driver we were sailors and wanted to make a break. He nodded his head and soon all the buses stopped, one bumping into the next. The door opened and, as I later learned, sixteen of us streamed out. I was the first man out of our bus. I still don't know whether I jumped or was pushed by "Action Jackson" behind me. We walked straight across the street into an Arab garage where we asked for parts to a '38 Ford. When we saw the convoy had passed on, we walked down the street until a car stopped and asked us in Hebrew how to get to some street. Instead of answering, "I'm a stranger here myself," we climbed into the back seat and asked him to take us to an address in the city.

In a few more minutes we were safe in a room in the best hotel in Haifa. There we found eight of the boys. The others had been captured and sent on to Athlit. Everything was new and wonderful to us in the hotel — warm water, clean linen, beds, and finally a huge roast beef dinner.

Everybody turned to me, for I was awestruck. I couldn't eat a thing. I was still stuffed with those damned biscuits.
